The Cruelwed Comedies ----No. 2

Getting Henry Cruelwed to church is like dragging a mule there for Caroline Cruelwed. On this particular Sunday Henry manages to sneak away and go fishing. Just as Caroline is explaining to the minister that Henry was unable to come owing to the fact that he has to nurse Minerva, their sick goldfish, Henry appears on the scene with a nice bass which he unsuccessfully tries to hide from the minister and the scandalized church-goers.

Seeing, however, that Henry has caught something Caroline forgives him and decides to have a fish dinner and invite an extra couple. But the Jones' can't come owing to company, while the Smiths' are going out of town, but finally the Blacks' accept.

That evening the Black's arrive---bringing a friend--- Henry comes back into the kitchen and measures the fish and is very doubtful whether it will go around. The bell rings again--the Smiths' couldn't go out of town as Mrs. Smith's sister from the Twin Cities has left her twins in her charge so they have decided to accept the invitation after all and have brought the twins along. Then Mr. and Mrs. Jones come in with the news that their cook has left and they have their niece with her triplets on their hands so they have come over and brought the whole bunch along. With twins from the Twin Cities, triplets from Three Rivers, Henry gets a telegram from his parents-in-law saying they will be over from the Thousand Islands in time for dinner -- Henry expects with an orphan asylum.

After stalling the houseful of guests off as long as possible, Caroline finally lets the small army file into dinner. There isn't even enough bread to go around so after serving one side of the table Henry sneaks it away again and serves the other side with the same bread. He unsuccessfully tries to stall the thirteen guests off with icewater, finger bowls and artificial grapes until the breaking point is reached and they all say simultaneously "Where is the fish?" Boldly Henry goes out to get the tiny fish in--But when he gets there, the platter is bare-- and a certain black cat has had a good square meal.

Henry, half delirious, has a wild vision, where in a futuristic background reminiscent of the Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, he creates a monster fish for his guests after the manner of the Golem. The huge monster afterwards attacks him. He is brought out of his futuristic nightmare by Caroline telling him that her father and mother have arrived with a big basket of fish from the Thousand Islands.

In the dining room the guests are saying nasty things about Henry as a fisherman, when Henry enters in complete fishing regalia with a big string of Thousand Island fish and proudly boasts that seeing there wasn't enough he has just been around to the pond to get some more.

There was never a fisherman yet that didn't lie!
